A Repeal Of Martial Rule Seen In Poland

WARSAW — Poland's military council decided Monday to lift martial law, government reports

The Military Council of National al Salvation, which has been the supreme authority for 19 months, to "took appropriate decisions" at its meeting Monday, the official press agency PAP said.

The press agency said the 21member council had heard a recent

There was no word on what spe-cific action the military commit took at its meeting Monday. The military council presumably would PAG need to disband itself in order to FORK restore civilian rule.

The Polish authorities were un-CLASS willing to say on the record that a decision had been made to lift martial law on Friday, the national holiday of the socialist state. But they said privately that the move was a certainty.

PLO Renegade Emerges to Assail 'Traitor' Arafat

By Loren Jenkins

DAMASCUS — Abu Nidal, the renegade Palestinian who has spent a decade fighting a secret war of terrorism against the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman, Yasser Arafat, has emerged from the underground to make common cause with anti-Arafat rebels challenging the PLO leader's authority.

Apparently buoyed by the mutineers' defi-ance of the PLO leader and presumably encouraged by his Syrian government sponsors, Abn Nidal and his followers have openly attacked Mr. Arafat as a traitor. The group, which brags of having executed other Palestinians, has hinted that Mr. Arsfat may soon be condemned by the Palestinian people to a like fate.

So confident has Abu Nidal become as result of the mutiny that, for the first time since he was expelled from Mr. Arafai's el-Fatah organization in 1973 and went underground, he has eased the secretiveness of his own rival organization, called the Fatah Revolutionary

From there his followers - who until now largely had reputations as trained assassins have begun to propagandize for their move-ment, to seek recruits openly among young Palestinians in the city's overflowing refugee camps, and even to meet with foreign journalists who stumble across their path.

Abu Nidal's message that Mr. Arafat is a traitor to the Palestman cause because of his moderation has not changed since he was drummed out of Fatah by Mr. Arafat — and later condemned to death in absentia - for refusing to bow to the organization's policies of ment's latest martyrs — five young men executabandoning terrorism as a prelude to exploring ed on Mr. Arafat's orders in Lebanon's Bekaa diplomatic solutions to the Palestinian issue.

Mr. Bronis is also expected to question whether it was legal for the air force to maintain the secret fund, which existed for more than a decade from the mid-1960s until 1978, and to run covert operations without the approval of Congress.

In addition, Mr. Bronis will examine the role in the secret fund played by Lockheed Corp., the aerospace defense contractor.

A.G. Otsea, chairman of Lockheed Aircraft International in Switzerland, has been called by Mr. Bronis as a defense witness. Mr. Otsea is identified in both government and defense court documents as a former manager of the account. An official for Lockheed said that the company would have no comment.

Mr. Bronis says Mr. Collins first got involved with Mr. Bronis says he will call not only Mr. Haig and the fund in 1975 while stationed in Geneva. He said Mr. Collins urged his superiors in 1975 to close the accounts because of questions about their legality, "but his recommendation was overridden and he was placed in charge of the various accounts." Because of Swiss neutrality, military accounts are forbidden in Swiss banks. As a result, Mr. Bronis said, previous custodians kept the money in several accounts under their own names, Mr. Bronis said depositions taken recently in Switzerland indicate that previous custodians frequently moved the funds from account to account as the banks became suspicious of military involvement.

Mr. Bronis said Mr. Collins eventually moved the funds to the Swiss Bank Corp., where he had a personal account. In retrospect, Mr. Bronis says Mr. Collins would probably agree that it was unwise to mingle personal funds with government funds. But Mr. Collins has insisted to his lawyer that he did not profit personally al any time.

Most of the government case against Mr. Collins is secret. The six-count indictment, handed down Jan. 27, charges Mr. Collins with "knowingly and willfully converting to his own use approximately $445,000 and with embezzling $19,000. Mr. Bronis said that he believes the government will try to prove Mr. Collins kept about $40,000 in interest. He says that in running something as murky as an account for clandestine operations, Mr. Collins could not possibly account for every penny.

He said the questions about Mr. Collins did not surface until 1981, three years after his retirement, even though "the account was audited periodically and given a clean bill of health."

Neither Iraq Nor Iran Seems Able to Stage a Winning Push

By Drew Middleton

New York Times Service BAGHDAD — The Iraqi government faces the prospect that its costly war with Iran will drag on with neither side capable of a victorious offensive to end it, according to foreign military attaches here.

Attachés from Western and Asian countries believe that Iraq, which on Sunday celebrated the 15th anniversary of rule by the Ba'ath Socialist Party, would be able to repel any major Iranian assault on the northem, central or southern fronts.

They doubt Iran has the strength in armor, planes or logistics to attack simultaneously on three fronts.

The last Iranian offensive, in May, was on the central front in Missan province. The Iraqis, who have just under a million men in the army, air force, navy and security forces, broke up the attack with artillery and missiles from behind unles of barbed wire and extensive mine fields.

Foreign military attachés estimate that the Iranians need at least six weeks to prepare an offensive and that, consequently, they should be almost ready for another major attack.

Moreover, a successful attack on Kharg Island, the attaches said, would probably invite a suicide raid by Iranian planes on Iraqi oil installations.

The Iraqis, an attache noted, have become increas-

Turk Assails U.S.-Greek Bases Pact

ANKARA (AP) - Turkey's foreign minister, Ilter Turkmen, has informed U.S. diplomats that a reference to Turkey in a new agreement on U.S. military bases in Greece is a "negative development that is cause for regret and concern," the Foreign Ministry announced Monday.

Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou of Greece has said that the United States has agreed to maintain a strategic balance of power between Greece and Turkey and given Greece the right to revoke the agreement if this balance were upset in favor of Turkey.

The statement said this was placed in the agreement text despite Turkey's repeated warnings to the U.S. government that any mention related to Turkey directly or indirectly would be unacceptable. The two countries dispute seabed exploration rights and limits of air control and territorial waters.

Figueiredo Is Stable After Surgery

CLEVELAND (AP) — President João Baptista Figueiredo of Brazil faces three to four weeks of recovery at the Cleveland Clinic after a double coronary bypass operation, his cardiologist said Monday.

Mr. Figueiredo, 65, was listed in stable condition after Friday's three-hour operation, in which two arterial grafts were made by Dr. Floyd Loop, head of the thoracic and cardiovascular surgery department at the clinic

Dr. William Sheldon, the cardiologist, said Mr. Figueiredo would be returned to his suite at the clinic after a few days in intensive care and then would be able to start walking. "I think we'll probably ask the president to remain in Cleveland for at least another three or four weeks to continue his convalescence," Dr. Sheldon said.

The NASA administrator, James M. Beggs, said NASA hoped to get start-up money from Congress in the 1985 budget, begin construction in fiscal 1986 and have the station operating by 1992.

No exact figures have been determined but it is estimated that such an orbiting station would cost $5 billion to $10 billion. The first year's

McGovern May Seek U.S. Presidency

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former U.S. Senator George McGovern, whose 1972 presidential bid was crushed by President Richard Nixon, says he may enter the 1984 presidential race and has praised Mr. Nixon's record on foreign affairs.

"I'm going to spend some time thinking about it," the 60-year-old South Dakotan said of the possibility he will seek the Democratic nomination. He said he would decide after early September.

"Nixon was on the right track in the last years of his administration when he was working toward detente with the Soviet Union." Mr. McGovern said in an interview in Monday's Los Angeles Times. He added that his attitude toward Mr. Nixon had changed because of his distress over President Ronald Reagan's foreign and defense policies. He said be did not defend Mr. Nixon's role in the Watergate scandal, which led to Mr. Nixon's 1974 resignation.

Lebanon's President Departs for U.S.

BEIRUT (AP) - President Amin Gemayel left Monday for Paris on his way to the United States, where he planned to discuss U.S. military and economic aid and how to break the stalemate over foreign troop withdrawals, state and privately owned radio stations reported.

Mr. Gemayel, 41, is scheduled to meet Friday with President Ronald Reagan. He will also have talks with the Defense Secretary Caspar W.

Weinberger and congressional leaders during his five-day U.S. visit and will visit Lebanese-American groups in Detroit and Houston. In June, Mr. Reagan signed into law an emergency aid package for ebanon that included $150 million for economic reconstruction and $101 million for military sales, loan guarantees and training.

Genscher Backs Soviet-U.S. Proposal

BONN (Reuters) — Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher urged the United States and the Soviet Union on Monday to revive an informal compromise on medium-range missiles reached by their negotiators in eva last year, but disavowed by both governments.

Mr. Genscher is the first Bonn cabinet minister openly to endorse the "walk-in-the-woods" approach worked out by the U.S. chief negotiator, Paul Nitze, and his Soviet counterpart, Yuli A. Kvitsinsky, during an off-duty stroll last summer. "I believe that the closer we come to the resumption of talks after the summer recess, the more useful it will be to think on the lines of that walk in the woods," Mr. Genscher told a Deutsche Welle radio interviewer.

Under the formula, Moscow would be left with 75 SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe while the West could deploy the same number of cruise missile launchers. No Pershing-2 missiles would be stationed in West Germany.

WASHINGTON - Wayne H. Valis, a former Reagan side, has named two men as the sources of a memorandum he received in 1980 dealing with plans of the Carter campaign staff for the Reagan-Car-ter debate that fall.

A spokesman for a House sub-committee headed by Representative Donald J. Albosta, Democrat of Michigan, said that Mr. Valis had identified the two sources as John Lenczowski, a Soviet and East European affairs expert now on the staff of the National Security Council, and Robert D. Leahy, a lobbyist and public relations man.

The naming of the two sources, however, does not shed any light on the major unanswered question as to who on President Jimmy Carter's staff at the White House might have given material to the Reagan campaign for use in the debate. Neither Mr. Lenezowski nor Mr. Leahy worked in the White House at that time, and neither was involved in the Carter campaign.

The subcommittee spokesman said that the panel, after further Mr. Lenczowski, at the time of questioning of Mr. Valis, would the 1980 presidential campaign,

Now the Negotiating

New proposals by each side have brought the Soviet Union and the United States within negotiating range on strategic weapons. Two types of agreement now look feasible.

One would be essentially a modification of the unratified but mutually observed limits written into SALT-2 in 1979. The missile reductions now offered by the Soviet side exceed the cuts it refused to make in that treaty or even to promise for SALT-3. The Pentagon wants still more, but the present Soviet offer already allows President Reagan to claim a major gain with respect to the treaty terms that he denounced as "fatally flawed.

What such a treaty would not achieve is the total restructuring of Soviet forces that the Reagan administration has demanded in ex-change for a few U.S. reductions. To eliminate Moscow's theoretical "first strike" capability against American land missiles, the Reagan team has been asking the Russians to dismantle more than half their land-based forces, including two-thirds of the 600 heavy SS-18s and -19s. Yet they are asked to tolerate America's "first strike" missile, the 10-warhead MX. This was never a plansible bargaining position.

These "first strike" fears could be addressed in a second, separate treaty that would look toward gradual restructuring on both sides.
As proposed by President Reagan's Scowcroft commission and endorsed by Mr. Reagan himself, the aim would be to replace the most menacing, destabilizing multi-warhead missiles with small, single-warhead weapons. Negotiating that bargain would take a long time, but an early agreement in principle should be possible, setting a target of 10 to 20 years for the retirement of all multi-warbead missiles, and a timetable for the transition.

The two types of agreement are easily made compatible. The superpowers could agree to restructure while continuing to observe the present weapons limits in SALT-2, or reduce those limits in the manner of some of their START proposals. If America will not insist on an immediate restructuring of Soviet forces, those proposals are clearly converging.

The Russians suggest cuts by the end of the decade to 1,800 missiles and bombers (from SALT's 2,250); the Americans say 1,200 missiles and 400 bombers. That is a negotiable difference of 200. The Russians propose sublimits of 1,080 multi-warhead weapons on land or sea (from SALT's 1,200) and of 680 for land sione (from SALT's 820). That would let them keep all SS-18s and -19s but would require dismantling about 100 other large missiles.

The Reagan administration no longer seeks to defer discussion of air-based cruise missiles. Both sides would set a sub-limit of 120 cruisebearing bombers, with Washington offering a limit of 2,400 (down from 3,360) cruises. The American proposal to reduce total warheads from about 7,000 to 5,000 is probably acceptable to Moscow if Mr. Reagan drops the demand that no more than half be based on land.

There are other potential sticking points. One is the undefined American demand for better verification. Another is the Soviet threat to retreat from its proposals if American medium-range missiles are deployed in Europe.

Such issues can always be exploited by those who think that euphoria over treaties would mper rearmament. But weapons costs and the obvious political interests in a Reagan-Andropov summit meeting are now counterpressures. There are no longer any insuperable technical obstacles if Presidents Reagan and Andropov want to advance the cause of arms control and can extract agreement from reluctant parties in both societies.

More Help for Ethiopia

It turns out there may be a way for America to do more for starving Ethiopians after all. The question had arisen as a result of news reports suggesting that the Reagan administra-tion was allowing the rancid state of official U.S.-Ethiopian relations to impede famine relief. In the matter of trucks for distribution of available supplies, officials had justified hesitation on grounds that any transport provided to the government, and any supplies, might be diverted to the Ethiopian war effort. This explanation raised the question of whether the administration was allowing politics and bureaucracy to muffle humanitarian concern.

There are a lot of obstacles to the free flow of relief to the people suffering in Ethiopia's afflicted northern provinces. Most of these are obstacles imposed by the Ethiopian government, a Moscow-oriented military regime not loath to use food as a weapon of civil war.

The United States has responded to the few and limited direct appeals it has received from the Ethiopian government, supplying the spe-cial high-protein foods needed by mothers and children. It has also been helping the Ethiopian refugees who have fled into Sudan. Still, America has appeared to be dragging its feet in response to a United Nations appeal in May for transport. The Agency for International Development now reports that it is discussing with Catholic Retief Service, and with other of the private agencies that do the actual food distribution, ways in which local trucks can be leased or rented. The idea is that these methods allow the money to go further and limit the possibility of diversion to military use.

Nothing done by compassionate foreigners can make up for the policy choices of the Ethiopian government or the stinginess of that government's Soviet patrons. In Ethiopia as elsewhere, Moscow continues to concentrate on furnishing arms, leaving it to the Western countries to pick up the requirements of relief, not to speak of development. All that provides no reason, however, for the United States to fall away from its traditional position that relief of starvation knows no politics.

Recovery Means Investment

To sustain recovery, politicians are tempted to think that consumer spending should grow as fast as possible, which it will be able to do if wages run well ahead of prices. That is actually the way to cut short this recovery, because what is needed is wage restraint that will boost profits and hence investment.

A cyclical rebound in profits will not be enough to provide the investment follow-through that was missing in the 1975-76 re-covery and again in 1978-79. For that, profits need to rise at the expense of wages - and go on doing so for several years.

ential candidates entering America's election year of 1984 are not likely to want to emphasize this, and even conservative governments which have recently won elections in Britain, West Germany and Japan do not seem cager to emphasize it.

The IMF and Brazilians

The International Monetary Fund's second attempt to screw a deflationary program out of the Brazilian government is all over, as they say, bar the rioting. The first sign that the Brazilians may not take the package lying down came with the announcement that a one day strike is being prepared for Thursday.

The truth is that the Fund is still trying to deal with newfangled problems with some very old-fashioned methods. What was a suitable policy prescription for a relatively rich developed country attempting to hold a fixed parity for its exchange rate under the postwar Bret-ton Woods system is not necessarily suitable for poor countries facing more pressing prob-lems and with populations at appallingly low levels of income. Very real hardship can result.

WACPAC Is on the Trail

The Whimsical Alternative Coalition Political Action Committee, better known as WACPAC, is officially registered with the Federal Election Commission. It had thus far limited its activity to giving parties on the anniversary of the Watergate burglary. Now it is undertaking a more serious role — investi-gating how the 1980 Reagan presidential campaign received purloined highly sensitive documents from a mole in the Carter campaign.

WACPAC has already nicknamed the disgruntled Carter employee who passed the documents "sore throat." It says the number-one suspect is Richard Nixon: "He's been blamed for everything else in the last 15 years, thus habit dictates his inclusion on this list. We are awaiting the smoking gun." - Clay F. Richards, UPI (Washington).

As a result, it is possible that conces sions by the importing nations, particularly France and Italy, on their wheat import re-strictions, may be based on the opening of a market for their wines in the United States. Another meeting with Russia brought renewed Soviet emphasis on the necessity of foreign financing of its wheat crop.

Americans Are Moving Toward Consensus

WASHINGTON — Politics is usually seen as a series of debates. Yet in the long run what politicians and voters agree on can be more important than what they argue about. It is hard to make sense of the politics of 1983 if you are looking for heated debates. What is happening becomes clearer when you look for consensus - which is what the voters have asked the politicians to produce.

In 1982 the voters saw to it that the Republican president had a Democratic House and a Republican Senate to work with. As a result we have had a kind of national coalition government, reaching decision by negotiation between Republican leaders and either the Democratic House leadership or House Democrats who, on a particular issue, can attract enough of a following to make a majority with the Republicans.

This coalition government has produced a gasoline tax, a cut in future Social Security benefits, a compromise on the MX missile and disarmament. It has produced something close to a consensus on the budget. The House and Senate spending figures are not far spart, and the president's adamant opposition probably en-sures there will be no significant tax increase. But its work pales in importance next to ideas that suddenly seem to command almost universal agreement. These include consensus on: · Education. The National Commission on Excellence in Education and other commissions By Michael Barone that reported this spring have articulated a con-sensus on which school boards and politicians at the state and local level have been acting for several years now. American schools are not doing a good enough job teaching basic skills or encouraging distinction. More money is needed. but it's not enough by itself; there must be changes in teaching methods and in the structure of the teaching system (e.g., merit pay).

• Limits to the public sector. Not one of the Democratic presidential candidates is promising a guaranteed annual income, national health insurance or Social Security benefit increases. No one in the Reagan administration is talking about significant further cuts in federal domestic spending. At the state level we see a similar situation. Even states in great economic diffi-culty are raising taxes to maintain many if not all state services, while the richest states show no propensity to increase spending vastly.

a Civil rights. Here consensus is not so apparent, yet there are signs. The Reagan administra-tion has belatedly acknowledged that civil rights laws are not fully obeyed and that new laws may be needed against discrimination. On the other side, the Joint Center for Political Studies published in June a paper signed by distinguished black leaders which concentrated not on the issues of busing and quotas but on the economy, the black family and education.

The gasoline tax, the Social Security compromise and the MX-disarmament agreement will affect lives in the next several years. The emerging consensus on education and, perhaps, civil rights has the potential to improve the quality of American life 20 and 40 years from now.

In each case it has been reached in large part because the Reagan administration, with popular support, has put a barrier in front of liberals. In some cases the response has been just to stop; in others it has been to change direction. But the result has not been a simple ratification of the Reagan position. In some cases the Reaganites find the consensus leading on a course they would never have chosen by themselves.

It is possible that the Democrats, if they win back control of the government in 1984 or 1988, will change course and the consensus will vanish. But there is not much evidence - aside from some ritualistic homage to the goals of some lobbies - in the words and actions of the Democratic presidential candidates that this will be so. There is even less evidence in the actions of the Democrats where they are in control, in the House of Representatives and in the governments of many states. If anything, they are helping to fashion consensus—which, by definition, is not produced by one party alone.

But in the same breath Mr. Perle said that even if an arms control agreement is reached with Moscow, the United States will go ahead with the MX missile, the B-1 bomber, the Stealth bomber, the Trident-2 submarine and its new missile. The current U.S. arsenal was built earlier than Soviet weapons, so it is older and we have to catch up with their catching up, he insisted, saying it is false to call this an "arms race."

All that is why Seymour Hersh's book about Heavy Kissinger in the Nixon White House matters. The sordid bureancratic infighting and the ego trips can be set aside as the gossip of history. Every government has dirty linen. But Mr. Hersh has carefully correlated the various versions of major policy decisions, public and private, in a way that shows how much of the "explanations" were de-liberate lies. Certainly, it didn't begin in the Nixon administration.

It was unfortunate, one of the casualties of hurried journalism, that the same kind of matching what was said out loud and what was being done was never attempted with the Pentagon Papers, which reached back through the Kennedy and John-son administrations. Nicaragua: Are Soviet Bases Really the Point?

PRINCETON, New Jersey — Bases, it seems, are the sticking point. "If the Soviet Union or the Cubans, in conjunction or alone, were to establish a major base or military position in Central America, I think it would be a matter of very, very serious concern," former Vice President Waher Mondale told a television audience last month.

The words could have come from President Reagan or any member of his administration. They are always put forward as self-evident truths. Yet it is by no means self-evident that Soviet (let alone Cuban) bases in Central America would seriously threaten the security of the United States. Those who utter such certainties owe their listeners a careful exanation of what they mean.

When politicians or officials talk of "vital interests," what they usually have in mind is money. When they say that a given Soviet action will pose "grave challenges" they mean that the United States will have to spend more to counter it. They should be required to specify what they think the cost might be. That would bring the issue down to earth. Cost estimates - and whether or not they should be paid — are debatable.
"Vital interests" are not.

In the case of Central America, those who claim to fear Soviet or Cuban bases should be asked what it would cost to neutralize them rapidly if they were ever used for military operations against the United States, its allies (including other Latin American nations) or the strategic Caribbean shipping lanes.

"Taking out" a base would require a certain number of navy and air force personnel, using predictable amounts of fuel and munitions. Some ships, planes, bombs and persons would need to be bought or recruited anew, so as not to tie down resources needed elsewhere. Others would not.

There is already substantial U.S. power in the region. And Central America is within range of Air Na-tional Guard and Naval Reserves formations not earmarked for combat farther afield. If a price tag were assigned to the task of meeting the Soviet or Cuban "grave challenge" in the hemisphere, the chances are that the figure would not cause much of a bulge in the Pentagon's budget.

By Richard H. Ullman

For the Russians, on the other hand, an encounter would be highly disadvantageous. They would be depending on long and precarious lines of supply, far from home ports and airfields, while Americans flying from Texas and Florida could drop their bombs and he home for lunch. Indeed, what would Moscow gain from running such risks? Not any change in the overall strategic balance: In an era of intercontinental missiles, fixing nuclear weapons from nearby bases conveys no real benefit. And there are no plausible ways in which the Soviet Union could profit from attacking North America with conventional weapons.

The irony is that Soviet bases in the Eastern Mediterranean or the South China Sea would be much more harmful to U.S. interests than bases in the Caribbean. Moreover, it should be remembered that Moscow already has bases in Cubz at its disposal. Why should it now seek new ones? Similar considerations apply to Cuban bases in Central America.

Supply lines would be shorter, but the stakes much higher. Would the Castro regime imagine that a United States sufficiently provoked to strike at Cuban bases would allow Cuba itself to remain unscathed?

The overwhelming military advantage that the United States would enjoy in its own backyard is what makes it so untenable to argue that a Soviet or Cuban presence in Central America would seriously threaten U.S. national security.

It also makes it most unlikely that Russians or Cubans would ever place significant military "assets" there and run the risk of losing them in the first hours of a shooting war. And it makes it likely that, if Soviet or Cuban bases were ever established in Central America, they would be used only to defend the country in which they were located - Nicara-208 for instance Nicaragua, indeed, is the real issue. Its Sandinist regime is under attack from rightist insurgents based in Honduras who are armed, trained and paid by the United States. Thus far it has been able to cope with these enemies without striking at their stag-ing areas in Honduras. But if the insurgency grows, the Sandinists might well retaliate across the border.

The Sandmists would do so with aircraft supplied by Moscow and Halaunched from airfields vans and launched from arrifelds built with Cuban assistance. But in thus retaliating and in seeking help from abroad, they would be acting entirely in accord with the international law of self-defense.

Yet Washington might seize upon any such Sandinist effort as an excuse for air and naval strikes against "So-viet and Cuban bases" in Nicaragna. The United States might use its own forces. Or it might use the modern Honduran air force — trained and financed by the United States for the bulk of the job. If such operations occur, they should be seen for what they are: part of Washington's continuing not-so-covert campaign to overthrow the Sandinist govern-ment, not a response to any threat to the security of the United States.

Democrats are skeptical that Nicaraguen aid sustains the Salvadoran rebels, or that the corrupt Salvadoran regime can win unless U.S. combat troops light its war for it.

They oppose the Reagan administration's policies — yet fear being seen as jeopandizing U.S. security if Central America is "lost" to communism. They think they are covering themselves by drawing the line at bases. But they are actually playing the president's game.

"U.S. scenity, the safety of American citizens, that's why Central America matters so much," the president told a Republican gathering re-cently. So long as the Democrats allow such statements to go unchailenged, their opposition will be ineffective. They should insist that Mr. Reagan explain just what he has in mind, with numbers. The odds are that he cannot do so in a manner that convinces the American people that they face a significant danger.

Only twice in the last two contaries: have they overthrown a king, and in each case the deed was done in comperatively slow motion.

His grandson, Ludwig II, had an uncontrollable penchant for building fairy-tale castles at taxpayers expense. In 1868 he was removed from the throne as mentally incompetent and he drowned mysteriously in Lake

Stamberg a few days later. Now it appears to be the turn of Bavaria's Premier Franz-Josef Stranss, whose political death has been prematurely reported for years. The regicide scenario began taking shape last weekend at a convention of the Christian Social Union, the an tonomous Bavarian cister of the Christian Democratic Party. For 35 years Mr. Strauss has run the CSU with an iron hand, first as secretary-general and since 1969 as chairman. His power over the party, which he shaped into an instrument beholden to him, gave him unique leverage on the national scene. But this convention showed that the Stranss mystique is unraveling. He was re-elected for another twoyear term as chairman, but by only 77 percent of the vote, compared to nearly 97 percent two years ago. A. Stranss protègé fared even worse.

The chairman's two-hour keynote speech caused visible boredom; delegates yawned and kept their arms demonstratively folded during pas-sages that called for applause. Earthy jokes, a Strauss stock-in-trade that appeals even to his political opponents, failed to evoke laughter.

The convention did not formally end. It just drifted apart. By Saturday afternoon so many delegates had sim-ply walked out of the sweltering hall that there was no quorum and Mr. Strauss had to cancel his closing speech, along with the Bavarian and West German anthems.

He left Munich for another round as West Germany's "secret foreign, minister" — a trip to Czechoslovakia and Poland, which, be hopes, will culminate in a meeting with East, Germany's Erich Honecker.

The immediate cause of Mr. Strauss's Munich embarrassment was his recent emergence as an "Ost-politician" and the role he played in engineering a billion-mark, govern-ment-guaranteed commercial bank loan to East Germany. That caused. an uprour in his conservative party; the bolting of a Bundestag member Franz Handlos, and acrimonious de-bate in the Bavarian state cabinet.

Mr. Strauss resembles the sorcerer's apprentice. Having forged his party in hard-line anti-Communis ultra-conservatism, he cannot now. abruptly shift his followers to the more pragmatic stance required if he is to shine as a super-chancellor or super-foreign minister, above his coalition partners Helmat Kohl and Hans-Dietrich Genscher

But the real causes of the present discontent lie deeper. They were succincily expressed by Mr. Handles, the renegade deputy, who last week accused Mr. Strauss of practicing 'one-man democracy" in the party and did not limit the accusation to the East German loan controversy.

What has troubled Stranss sup-porters for some time is the belief that he has turned the CSU into an instrument for his personal aggrandizement; and that he accepted the premiership of Bavaria in 1978 as & consolation prize for having no plat-form in Bonn, and has treated that. office as a mere waiting room. ARTS/LEISURE

'A Star' Is Pieced Together

By Kevin Thomas Los Angeles Times Service F OS ANGELES — The 1954 ver-

L. sion of "A Star Is Born," starring Judy Garland and James Mason, is almost as legendary for its missing scenes as for its status as one of Hollywood's great musicals.

Thanks to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and Warner Bros. we now have the directed by George Cukor and written by Moss Hart. It will be shown in Los Angeles this week and later in Chicago and Dallas.

The impetus for the restoration project grew from sensational reac-tion to a clip of Garland singing "The Man That Got Away" at an academy tribute to Ira Gershwin.

The missing film was found by the Los Angeles County Art Muse-um's film programmer, Ronald Haver, in the most logical places - the vanits of Warner Bros. and the laboratories the studio used. Haver, for whom the reconstruction was a 181-minute running time and lesslong-dreamed-of labor of love. came up with 20 of 27 missing minntes, consisting mainly of alternate shots. He filled in the remaining seven minutes with production stills, aided by the complete originai stereo sound track.

Key funding came in the form of a $30,000 grant from Warners and 510,000 from Eastman Kodak.

Haver and associates have enhanced a classic so that it might be at last recognized as the masterpiece many have always felt it was.

The movie is one of Hollywood's most oft-told tales about itself, the latest being the 1976 version with Barbra Streisand and Kris Kristofferson. The story was first told by Cukor himself in the 1932 David O. Selznick production "What Price Hollywood?" starring Constance Bennett as a Brown Derby waitress who is given her big break by a director played by Lowell Sherman; as her career sours, his

Five years later, Selznick had the director William Wellman and the writers Dorothy Parker, Alan Campbell and Robert Carson rework it as "A Star Is Born." They eliminated "What Price Hollywood?'s" contrived ending and Haver believes the problems with the trimming of "A Star Is Born" started when Luft and Garland inserted the famous 20-minute "Born in a Trunk," which tells of the heroine's birth into vandeville and emergence into a star, and has parallels to Garland's life.

Haver feels that it brings the film to a halt and paved the way for cuts ordered by Jack Warner to satisfy exhibitors alarmed by the film's than-thrilling box office, despite good reviews. But Haver believes the trims did far more harm to the film than simply lifting out "Born in a Trunk" would have done. The substantial cuts occur near the beginning. Both versions open with Garland deftly protecting Mason from a disastrous public display of drunkenness. He later tracks her down at a club where she is singing and is impressed by her talent. He persuades her to leave her small band.

In the shorter version, we im diately see her being tested at Bickford's studio. In the original, Ma-son loses track of Garland, who in the meantime takes odd jobs, singing a jingle for a shampoo commercial and ending up as a car hop. Mason locates her only when he recognizes her voice in the commercial. He finds her at a rooming house, and explains that in his drunken stupor be had forgotten that he had been scheduled the next morning to go off on location for

'Staying Alive': John Travolta Without a 'Fever'

By Janet Maslin New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Only the pres-ence of John Travolta turns "Staying Alive" from an unquali-fied disaster into a qualified one. Travolta is able to radiate warmth and sweetness even under the direst of circumstances, which are certainly the ones in which he finds himself here. As directed by Sylvester Stallone, who is also co-writer and co-producer, "Staying Alive" is a sequel with no understanding "Saturday Night Fever" was funny and touching, powered by a phe-nomenally successful score. This film is clumsy, mean-spirited and amazingly unmusical.

"Staying Alive" resumes the story of Tony Manero five years later. He's now a dancer living in Manhattan, and he's after all those

He has clearly developed the last and is hoping it will bring him the first two, as he auditions, in various "All That Jazz"-inspired sequences, for roles in Broadway musicals. En route to the predictable triumph, he romances two other dancers, a goodhearted chorus girl (Cynthia Rhodes) and a smirky, sarcastic star called Laura (Finola Hughes).

Tony first sees Laura as she performs one of the ungainly, Apacheaspired dance routines that contribute all too heavily to the choreography. However, Laura turns out to be rich and snootty, and she sneers insult after insult at Tony, who under Stallone's tutelage has unfortunately learned to sneer back. The dialogue, also writ-ten by Norman Wexler, consists almost entirely of cheerless wise-

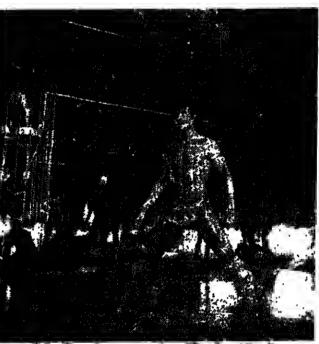

The big-break show, "Satan's Alley," is particularly dreadful. The costumes, by Bob Mackie, are gaudy and the dancers writhe through raceless contortions, Travolta looks terrifically agile, but that's not enough to save these sequences. Royalists of a Sort Share Memories

By Milly McLean

DURHAM, New Hampshire— There were no kings or queens or emperors, czars or shahs. But the royalists who gathered for the first American conference on monarchy had a lot of memories -

The only robes were the black ones worn by a Russian Orthodox priest. The pomp was largely confined to a short flag procession and several national anthems broadcast over a tinny loudspeaker.

The 150 participants in the threeday conference included exiled Iranians and Russians and a Hawaiian who harbors hope that a royal governor will return to his homeland.

The conference at the University of New Hampshire was the culmination of a 20-year dream by a be to others it is sentimental, but Stratford, Connecticut, man who inspects jet engines for a living. Peter Koltypin can trace his Russian ancestors back to A.D. 600. He said that his mother and father fought for the czar during the Russian revolution and that he was born in exile in Yugoslavia in 1933. He came to the United States in 1951 and later conceived the idea of a conference where monarchists could compare notes and correct misconceptions about kings and "In this country there's a great misunderstanding about monar-chies specifically about the Rus-sian monarchy," Koltypin said. The average person today thinks life is better now in the Soviet Union than it was under monarchy. Life before the revolution was 100 times better. It's a concentration camp now.

Koltypin bears the title of commander of the Order of Imperial Union of Russia. The crown jewel of the conference was supposed to be Grand Duke Vladimir Kyrilovich, the heir to the Russian throne, who lives in Spain. But be bowed out at the last minute because of a family emergency, Koltypin said, Most of those who did attend had only tenuous associations with rovalty.

Dressed in a brown and yellow Hawaiian shirt, sandals and heavy beads, Zotique said he went to the

The Gold Guessing Game: Selling Put, Call Options on N.Y.'s Comex

NEW YORK — Can gold be bought below current market prices or be sold for more than today's each quotes? Yes, by properly selling put and call options on the underlying futures.

Traders have been doing just that since last Oct. 4, when the options were introduced by New York's Commodity Exchange, the world's biggest precious metals futures market.

Basically, an option is the right, but not the obligation, to buy or sell the underlying commodity at a fixed price during a specified time. The one-time cost of the option is the premium. A call option is the right to buy the underlying futures contract; a put is the right to sell it under the

Bullion Merchants

Who Are Not Seeking

Gold Options to Save

On Costs of Financing.

Some examples of how traders use Comex gold options were giv-en last Thursday by Paul Samoff, vice president of Paine Webber Futures, a leading authority on precions-metals trading and the argest broker in gold options on

"Comex October gold futures are now trading at $429 an ounce, while the premium on the October call option with a strike price of $420 is $9, or $900 for the 100-ounce contract," he said, referring to Thursday's quotes. "If I sell a put on that option now, I will get $900 cash for contracting to sell a 100-ounce October futures contract at $420 an ounce. What would be my risk? Very little indeed."

If between last Thursday and mid-September, when the Comex October gold option expires, the price of the October gold futures declines to, say, $410 an ounce, the person who bought the put at $420 would exercise

it to recover the $900 premium

The seller of the put would still be better off having to buy the gold at $420 an ownce from the exerciser of the put than those who were then paying $429 for October gold futures since his $900 premium would offset most of the loss.

Choosing Premiums, Not Futures

But if the price of gold rises above $420 by mid-September, the person who bought the put would not exercise it. "In this case, I would pocket the $900 premium and not have to buy any futures," Mr. Sarnoff said.

Mr. Samoff also noted that he could sell a call on the $420 October option (there are several strike prices on that option above and below the $420 level) last Thursday for a premium of $20 an ounce, or $2,000 for the

"If the gold price goes up to, say, $450 an ounce," he continued, "the person who bought the call would undoubtedly exercise it and I would, in reflect, deliver the gold at $420 an ounce. But as I received a $20-an-ounce premium for the call I sold, I would, in effect, have presold the metal at $440. My losses would start when October gold rose above $440."

Suppose the price of gold declined below $440. In that case, the buyer would not exercise the call, and the seller could console himself with having bought bullion at a discount of $20 an ounce - the premium Actually, there is a continuous market in put and call options, even in an apparently out-of-the-money option that produced huge profits was the Comex August gold option, which expired July 9.

On the morning of July 7, the August call was trading at a premium of 70 cents, or $70 for the 100-ounce option. Later that day, rumors that Brazil had declared a moratorium on its huge foreign debt sent gold prices soaring. By the close, the premium had multiplied 24 times, to $1,680.

Comex officials also noted last week that while the options expire about a month before their underlying futures contracts, the value of the option is not affected. For example, if one exercised an October option today at, say, $400 an ounce, the futures contract received would go on the books at that price, even if the October futures were trading well above that level.

Saving on 'Free Metal'

Not all the participants in the gold-options market are investors seeking relatively quick profits. Many bullion merchants use options to save on financing costs.

"To finance 100 omnes of gold bullion for a year at an interest cost of even 12 percent works out to a carrying charge of $14 per ounce each day," Mr. Samoff explained. "If a merchant likes today's gold price, but doesn't want to pay the financing charge, he can buy call options at a much cheaper cost than keeping "tree metal" in inventory and paying insurance and, often, storage charges as well."

At 12 percent 100 owners financed for three months would cost $1.260.

At 12 percent, 100 ownces financed for three months would cost $1,260 if the metal were bought at $420 an ownce. Last Thrusday, the premium on an October call option was $900 for the 100-ounce contract. Thus, the merchant's saving would have been $360, less broker's commission, which applies to all options trades.

BIS Data Raise Concern About Lag in Lending

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS - International bank lending appears to be slowing much more sharply then had been expected, raising worrisome ques-tions about the ability of both developing and developed countries to finance their anticipated curent-account deficits this year, the Bank for International Settlements reported Monday.

The BIS cautioned that one quarter's figures do not necessarily ive an accurate picture, in particular because its quarterly data do not reflect the lending by non-U.S. banks from the so-called offshore financial centers.

But if the trend is confirmed in the second-quarter data and by the semi-annual survey, which takes a broader measure of the market

The International Monetary Fund, for example, has used as a working hypothesis that the net in-crease in bank lending to the nonoil-developing countries would increase some 7 percent this year, down from the 20-percent increase seen in the years before the emergence of the debt crisis in those countries. If lending, as now foreshadowed, fails to meet the IMF target, the debt crisis could deepen, making it more difficult for countries already in trouble to cover their need Debt problems could also spread to countries that have so far managed to stay current in their debt pay-

In either case, the lending decline portends a more radical cut than already envisioned in the im-ports of developing countries. This means increased hardship for the developing countries and weaker export markets for the developed countries still aching to move out

At the same time, the decline in bank lending could mean that even greater demands than expected will be put on the IMF to provide medium-term loans, raising new questions about the adequacy of the IMF's resources

The BIS report, covering the first three months of this year, says "the outstanding feature of the first quarter was a decline to $10 billion in the estimated growth of net in-ternational credit" extended by banks in the reporting area.

In BIS jargon, the reporting area covers the Group of 10 most industrialized nations, Switzerland, Denmark, Ireland, Luxembourg and Austria plus the branches of U.S. banks in offshore centers such as Hong Kong, Singapore, Panama and the Bahamas. The $10-billion increase was half the size reported in either the previous quarter or the year-earlier first quarter. Most of the increase -$8.5 billion - was lent within the reporting area. Some $5 billion of this was to non-bank borrowers, of which over half were Belgian and

Braniff's Plan for Reorganization is Approved by Bankruptcy Court

FORT WORTH, Texas (Renters) — The U.S. Bankruptcy Court here sis approved a plan that could result in Braniff International, the smakrupt airline, flying again later this year.

After final negotiations among creditor groups, Judge John Flowers at Friday approved a 170-page document containing Braniff's plans to estime operations. Judge Flowers ordered that creditor ballots be mailed on the 30,000 Braniff creditors and that votes be collected and counted by o the 80,000 straint creations and that voice be collected and counted by Aug. 25. A final confirmation hearing is scheduled for Ang. 30.

The legal documents outlining the plan were to be mailed to Braniff's reditors beginning Monday. The proposed reorganization calls for Chicago-based Hyatt Corp. to invest $20 million in Braniff in exchange for 80 percent of the airline's stock. Hyatt also would guarantee up to $50 million in loans to the company. Creditors would share the remaining 20 percent of the company.

Cable-TV Joint Venture Set Up

LONDON (IHT) - General Electric Co. of Britain and U.S.-based General Instrument Corp. announced on Monday a joint venture to develop and sell cable television equipment.

Instrument's Jerrold division, also will offer equipment for staging meetings using a television link. On the cable-TV side, the venture company will initially concentrate on Britain's industry, but it expects to develop products for export as well, the companies said.

Bonn Exported Capital to OPEC

FRANKFURT (Renters) - West Germany was a net capital exporter to members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in 1982, the first time since 1978, the Bundesbank said Monday in its latest monthly report.

In a study on capital movements, the central bank said the shift coincided with a return to surplus of the West German current account and the elimination of OPEC surpluses. In 1982 West Germany recorded a net capital outflow to OPEC countries of 3.3 billion Deutsche marks (51.27 billion) after net inflows of 15.4 billion DM in 1981.

S. Africa Ponders Earnings Change

JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) - The South African Reserve Bank hopes to start "within the next two to three months" passing on to gold mines their export earnings in dollars rather than converting them into rand, Gerhard de Kock, the Reserve Bank governor, said Monday. He said in a telephone interview from Pretoria that the bank is discussing such a move with the Chamber of Mines, mining companies and banks authorized to deal in foreign exchange.

The change would decrease the Reserve Bank's role as the largest foreign-exchange dealer in the market, but it will still be able to exert a major influence over the short-term trend of the rand, Mr. de Kock said. The bank currently dominates the market because it sells all the dollar proceeds from gold sales and passes on the money in rand the mining

Schering to Buy FBC Holdings

LONDON (IHT) - Schering, the West German chemical maker, said Monday that it had agreed to buy an agrochemical company from Boots Co, and Fisons PLC. The two British pharmaceutical companies are to receive £60 million ($91.2 million) apiece for their holdings in FBC Holdings, a joint venture set up in 1980.

Fisons said FBC showed profit of £6.2 million on sales of £150 million ast year. Potential returns from investments needed at FBC "are not Moscow Reports considered adequate to compensate Fisons for the risks," the company

Horst Kramp, a Schering director, said the acquisition is expected to raise the company's per-share earnings 10 percent in 1983. Last year, the company had worldwide after-tax profit of 73 million Deutsche marks, or 32.26 DM a share.

Overall, lending to developed countries outside the reporting area increased $300 million — a big change from the $3-billion to $5billion increase reported during ev-ery quarter of the two preceding years, the BIS noted.

The decline in lending to Eastern Europe accelerated, with outstanding loans declining $1.4 billion, nearly triple the $500-million rundown in the previous quarter, and putting the decline since the end of 1981 to about $6 billion.

The reasoning is that domestic currency would be used in tandem with trade financed by domestic export credit agencies. Trade loans would carry less risk for the banks because part of these credits would be guaranteed by the export credit agency and, in some cases, by the exporting company.

Foreign banks with offices in the United States would have an additional reason for preferring to make dollar loans from their U.S. offices. The U.S.-based operations have greater access to deposits in dollars and can deal more easily in the the U.S. money market. The U.S. money market is seen as a more certain source of funds than the Enrodollar market, which could scize shut if a crisis developed.

T OHN MONTAGUE is very much the Irish J poet. He has all the credentials: His middle name is Patrick, he was educated at St. Patrick's College, Armagh, he teaches in Cork, he edited "The Book of Irish Verse," and he was born in Brooklyn. Fortunately, he is skeptical about the indomitable Irish. It is because his poems find love hard — whether it is the love of Ireland or of individuals — that they do find

There is a characteristic flicker in a sentence about his own work when he says that his larger concern is with "continually threatened love." Threatened, not only as under threat, but as itself constituting a threat (like a threatened punishment). For love is a threat to all those simplifications in which one could luxur-iate. "Irish Street Scene, With Lovers" — the very first poem (1952) sets the scene with an air very first poem (1952) sets the scene with an air of mild surprise, and the next poem reminds us what love is up against but can't afford to cut free from — "Speech for an Ideal Irish Election." Looking back on the heady pleasures of political anger, Bob Dylan once thought of his past self, "My Back Pages," similarly: "Rip down all hate, I screamed."

John Montague's back pages here amount to 200 pages of "Selected Poems," a quarter of a century after his first volume. The poems embody a principled resistance to easy forms of talk, whether low or high-flown. When Joyce's Stephen Dedalus set forth, he put it to himself like this: "I so to eacounter for the milliouth time the reality of experience and to forge in the smithy of my soul the uncreated conscience of my race." The trouble is that this esthetic young man wouldn't have known how to begin to dirty his hands in a smithy. The reality of experience is just what his words haven't got. so that forge sounds like a piece forgery. Now hear what Montague makes of the word in his poem "Forge," or rather lets the word make of him and us:

The whole shed smelt of dead iron: the dented teeth of a harrow, the feminine pathos of donkey's shoes.

A labourer backed in a Clydesdale. Hugely fretful, its nostrils dilated while the smith viced a hoof in his apron, wrestling it to calmness, as he shared the pith like wood-chips, to a rough circle.

of the verb to forge.

Then the bellows sang in the tall chimney waking the sleeping metal, to leap on the anvil. As I was slowly beaten to a matching curve the walls echoed the stress

There the smithy does have the reality of experience alive in the comedy, the poignancy and the pleasure in craftsmanship. Montague's own craftsmanship is everywhere alive and nowhere obtrusive.

At the heart of the poem is that convincing oddity, wrestling it/to calmness, where what could so easily be aggression is really the hlacksmith's attentive care, with "wrestling" carrying the suggestion of an unviolent affectionate wresting. Like many of the best Irish poems, this remembers enmity but does not forget amity. Or there is the play of "smelt" against "iron." where the process of smelting is unmistakably called up but fended off in an act of nonviolence. Montague is at one with Robert Lowell's intuition of the anti-pun, where a second meaning is called up only to be held at arm's length, so that there can be no actual violent clash of the two meanings. "A yellow buildozer/raising the rubble": oot razing it. "Content was life in its easiest form": content was life in its easiest form": content was life in its easiest form": content was life in its easiest form." TENT (contentment), not CON-tent (as against form). Montague always writes well of calm and calmness. He has some of Shelley's sense of how deep this appetite is, "It is the unpastured sea hungering for calm.") Montague particularly values the calm that must always acknowledge that it cannot last:

To be angry in the morning,

by midday, but brooding again

the evening was all in a day's

Injured Simon Abandons Tour; Fignon Takes Over Lead in Alps Delgado is one minote and eight overall leader of the Tour de

By Samuel Abt

tional Herald Tribune ALPE D'HUEZ, France - The long agony of Pascal Simon ended Monday in the Alps, when the French bicycle racer dropped out of the Tour de France he had led for a week despite the pain of a fractured left shoulder blade.

The journey that has made Si-mon a national hero finished at the Chappelle-Blanche hill, 95 kilometers (60 miles) into Monday's 223cilometer stage. Coasting onto the shoulder of the road, the 26-year-old Simon made the cyclist's traditional gesture of surrender: He put his feet on the ground while the race was in progress

"I'm very sad and very sorry," he said, "but the pain is too strong." Then he turned his bicycle over to a mechanic for his Peugeot team and climbed into a car to finish the trip to this mountain resort.

Simon was replaced as the Tour de France's overall leader by Lanrent Fignon, a 22-year-old French-man with the Renault Gitane team. Riding in his first Tour de France, Figures was second to Simon by 40 conds before Monday's stage.

Peter Winnen, a 25-year-old Dutchman with the Raleigh team, won Monday's keg, edging Jean-René Bernaudeau, a 27-year-old hman with the Wolher team Third was Edgar Corredor of the Colombian amateur team; Robert Alban, a Frenchman with the Redoute team, was fourth, while Fignon was fifth.

The new leader finished two minutes and eight seconds behind Winnen and Bernaudeau, who were clocked in seven hours, 21 minutes and 32 seconds in the ride here from La Tour-du-Pin in the Massif Central.

Behind Fignon in the general standings, which are based on overall clapsed time since the race started July 1, are Pedro Delgado, a 22year-old Spaniard with the Reynolds team who finished seventh Monday, then Bernandean seconds back, Bernaudeau 2:33, Winnen 3:31 and Sean Kelly, a 27year-old Irishman with the Sem team, is fifth, 4:20 back.

With less than a week to go before the Tour de France ends Sunday in Paris, the race is still considered as being wide open. Especially because of Fignon's inexperience. Hundreds of thousands of cycling fans watched Monday's final ascent to Alpe d'Huez, lining the 21 switchbacks that climbed 1,860 me-

To judge by the banners many held, they hoped Simon would reach this mountain, lasting one more day in a ride that has moved from the sports pages of French newspapers to Page 1 and that has dominated the tour's television

But Monday was one day too many for Simon. He warned Sunday that he did not think he could continue, and has been saying for days that his pain was growing worse — but that he did not want to quit while he was still wearing the yellow jersey of the DeLeon Beats Gordon

LAS VEGAS - Puerto Rican Carlos DeLeon avenged an earlier oss to S.T. Gordon by winning a 12-round decision and regain the World Boxing Council cruiser-weight championship here Sunday. DeLeon, who lost his title 13 months ago on Gordon's secondround knockout, floored Gordon in the first round and again in the 12th and was in control throughout. Judge Tomasaito Tomihara scored the fight 118-112, while judges Ray Solis and Jose Guerra both saw it 119-109. DeLeon's record is 32-3-1. Gordon is 24-6.

As the race entered the Alps Monday, it was obvious that Simon could not keep the jersey.

When he dropped out, he was more than 11 minutes behind the leaders, and only three of the day's six major peaks were behind him. A rider of promise but of slight accomplishment before this year, Simon took over the lead — mov-ing up from 10th place overall — last Monday, when he finished third in the Pyrenees. The next day, at the 40th kilometer of a 178-kilometer race, he fell beavily when his bicycle was bumped. He finished the race but was then taken to a hospital where X-rays revealed the fracture.

Doctors have been treating him with heat, ice and laser beams and taping his shoulder blade each day, but Simon's pain was obvious. left arm was limited, and he has also reported that he could not sleep through the night.

Despite his state, he held his lead all least week in a series of pack finishes, but lost nearly four minotes to Fignon in a time trial on Saturday, when he could not put pressure on his arm while climbing. Climbing is what the Alps are about and so, after a week in which everybody said he was finished, Simon finally decided to agree.

By Joseph Durso New York Times Service

NEW YORK - "Comeback" as won six straight and 16 of its may not be the best word to apply st 20. The Twins dropped their to a player who is hitting over .300 for the fifth consecutive season, who made the All-Star team for the eighth straight time and who is carning $1 million every year. But George Brett of the Kansas City Royals concedes that he is making a comeback after two years of distractions, injuries and hassles. He is trying to recapture not only the graceful left-handed swing that in 1980 produced a batting average of .390, but also the image of a highly motivated athlete of almost heroic standing.

The rub, though, is that he frac-tured the little toe on his left foot at the height of his comeback, missed three weeks of games and now is trying to prove his point all over again.

"I was swinging the bat as good as I ever did when it happened," Brett said recently. "Very similar to the way I was swinging in 1980. . . . My confidence was there, and it seemed everything was going my way.

Then I broke the toe, and had to sit down three weeks. Now I'm back, but it hasn't got any better. It hurts when I run, and it swells up when I play. But I'm going to go out every day and hit and not worry about my average or anything else. You don't need any distractions. When you hit, you have to block it all out.

Two things happened to Brett this year that tested his bounceback quality.

On May 15, be reached his 30th. birthday, and he says with some wonder: "I can't picture myself 30 years old. I was always the youngest guy on the team." He says he circled the locker room and asked

Not wanting to miss Buckner's turn at bat, Brest hurried toward the TV room to watch, slammed his left foot against the door jamb and fractured the little toc. on so. It was the 19th injury in eight years that removed him from the linears, and this one came just when years that removed him from the interm, and this one came just when asses. See the see to see

Fortunately, the Pentagon's agents pointed out that while it looked like nerve gas, it was actually a bargaining chip and — whoopsy-daisy — the Senate sprang for another $130 million.

I trust it will behave with the same generosity when it deals with my request for $15 million for the attack dirigible. My engineers have have nearly completed a balsa-wood model of this machine, but my efforts to get a contract from the Pentagon received little encouragement. When I first showed drawings to the assistant secretary of defense for waste, he asked,

"What is it? A flying zuechini?" A very young man, he may have had a Harvard MBA in squandering, but he knew nothing about the great dirigibles that darkened the skies in his father's day.

"You mean this thing will be five miles long, travel at 55 miles an hour through the air and carry 500 megatons of chilled strawberry. raspberry, cherry, orange, lemon or lime gelatin?" he asked.

The gelatin will be chilled and aged to that rubbery consistency that makes it bounce when it hits the floor, Averaging three bonness per gelatin cube, we can take out three cities by dropping a full pay-load of two-ton cubes from an alti-

He was fascinated. "The attack dirigible, eh? I like it, It could be the most ridiculous waste of money since we started furnishing admi rals' cabins on aircraft carriers with antiques and decorator fabrics. How many billions do you think you'd need?"

I did some fast calculating. I had to pay the two women who drew N EW YORK — The way to the blueprints and the boys who made the balsa-wood model. I also days is to tell Congress you need a wanted to buy a Manhattan apartment and treat myself to a twoweek vacation in Asbury Park.

"What?" he cried, "You're going to make the gelatin bounce? Don't you realize that a two-ton gelatin cube falling from 20,000 feet can hurt people

I started to leave "Look, we're not out to hart the Russians. We just want them to sit down at the table and play a little poker."

"Russians don't play poker. They play chess," I noted. "So? Poker, chess — what does Congress know? Now, this attack dirigible of yours — you know what it looks like to me?"

"A flying zucchini?"
"A chip," he said, "A bargzining chip. Suppose we let Moscow know that we intend to go ahead with building 10,000 attack dirigibles." "I don't think there's enough gel-atin in the world to arm 10,000 of

"We don't need the gelatin," he said, "We need the money for planning, research, development, enterment, production foulups, cost overruns. Once we get the money, the whole thing turns into a bar-gaining chip and the Russians have to sit down and put one of their chips in the pot. Everybody works, the dirigible never gets built and smart people make money out of the Wall Street boom in gelatin

And so the $15-million item crept into the Pentagon budget. Sure, it's embarrassingly small, but as the assistant secretary of defense for perpetual gravy observed to me, "In the Pentagon, mighty expendi-tures from rubbery gelatin grow."

Lionel Hampton

At 70, the 'Vibes President' Still Puts on a Hell Of a Show as He Whistlestops Through Europe

By Michael Zwerin International Herald Tribuna

NICE — Billed as "the world's fastest drummer," Lionel Hampton, currently touring Europe, was recording Euble Blake's "Memories of You" in 1930 with Louis Armstrong, who saw a set of vibes in a corner. The vibraphone is classified as a percussion instrument, a xylophone with metal rather than wooden keys. It had been invented only 10 years earlier and Armstrong had never seen one before. He asked Hampton if he could play it. Hampton had never seen one either but drummers handle mallets and be answered "Sure" without hesitation. He says it was "the first time the vibes were used in

Now known as the "Vibes President." Hampton threw his hat in the ring six years later when he recorded "Moonglow" and "Dinah" with Benny Goodman, Teddy Wilson and Gene Krupa. His candidacy took on a serious dimension during the following four years with the Benny Goodman Quartet, the first big-league multiracial jazz group. He formed his own big band in the early 1940s (he's had one ever since) and over the years staffed it with such future cabinet ministers as Charles Mingus, Quincy Jones, Wes Montgomery, Clifford Brown and Dexter Gordon. The Vibes President worked Harry Truman's inauguration ball in 1949, the first black musician to have such an honor. He played the same gig for Eisenhower (twice), Johnson, Nixon and Reagan. The campaign was in high gear.

He became a faithful contributer and fundraiser for the Republican Party, and claimed Nelson Rockefeller as a personal friend. When George Bush was director of central intelligence ("I used to play parties for his father, Senator Prescott Bush of Connecticut") during a period when the CIA was under fire, Bush called and asked Hampton to come over and "pep us up."

Dropping his lower in for his ear-splitting laugh, Hampton says: "We put on a hell of a

That's something you can count on — he puts on a good show. Although having rich friends in positions of power never harts a career, Hampton is not the type to sacrifice music on the altar of money. Even though he is 70, has an executive paunch, wears threepiece suits, runs a real estate development company (Lionel Hampton Enterprises) and attends meetings in boardrooms and politicians' digs, he still gives the impression of being a complete man only while blowing about 35 choruses of his hit "Flyin' Home" in front of his shouting big band.

His desire and stamina are legendary. Musicians make good-natured jokes about it —
"How do you get Hamp to stop blowing?"
"Fly him home." In September 1981, when

Republican Hampton: Good deeds without ballyhoo.

the invitations went out - "The President and Mrs. Reagan request the pleasure of your company at a concert and reception to be held at the White House . . . on the occasion of a salute to Lionel Hampton" — the best way to salute him was to let him play as much as he wanted, meaning just about from beginning to end. After listening along with the 900 guests, Reagan told Hampton, "I don't think you've missed a beat in all these years," and added nostalgically: "Aren't we glad we grew up in the era of big bands?"

Hampton, who was a Reagan delegate at the 1980 convention, sees nothing incongru-ous about a black being committed to the Republican Party. "The Democrats use blacks just to get their vote. But when the time comes to compensate, they forget all about us. Republicans do good deeds for blacks without ballyhooing

A player, not a talker, the modest Hampton tends to mumble; his manager, Bill Ti-tone, helped him explain how he used his Washington connections to unblock federal funds for middle- and low-income housing projects through the Lionel Hampton Community Development Corp. A six-acre com-plex called "Hampton Hills" is under construction in Newark, New Jersey.

Of course, developers make profits and connections don't hurt. Hampton lives in a comfortable Manhattan apartment, a few blocks from Lincoln Center. He is also known as a charitable man. He donated part of the profits from the sold-out Kennedy Center gala in his honor after Reagan's White House salute to fund a Lionel Hampton Cultural Center in Harlem. "We are trying to get additional support from foundations, private individuals and big corporations. It will be like a community college and we will give degrees in all the arts."

The Kennedy Center salute included Dave Brubeck, Pearl Bailey, Tony Bennett, Zoot Sims and others, most of whom were ready to quit when Hampton (who had already played all afternoon) announced: "We'll play till 5 in the morning" and lanuched into "Hey Babar-ebop." The stagehands did not agree, however, and they cut the juice.

On the road about 40 weeks a year, Hampton rejuvenates himself by hiring the gung-ho, highly competent youngsters now being numed out by American jazz courses. "These kids, some of them will go on to be doctors or lawyers but they want to put in a few years on the road with a big band. There's a certain amount of glamour involved."

This glamour once prompted Richard Nix-on to joke that he'd rather be playing piano on the road with the Vibes President than be in the White House.
